And that is what history is all about. And as we'll see, history is in general trying to understand the stories of our past. And if we want to get a little bit more technical, we can also think about prehistory, which is, technically, the things that happened before we had writing. Because writing is our main tool for history.

I would very much like to see a Chinese author write a global history combined more thoroughly with Chinese history. As the second volume of this book focused mostly on European centralized view (no problem with that). To inspect China from a global point of view seems to be a difficult task, hope some good work can come out.
