Archetypal Criticism – Dr. S. Devika

The apocalypse archetype (the end of the world) is something that most people have on their minds and is often used in fictional narratives of all kinds. It's worth noting that the apocalypse isn't always seen in a negative light, even though it implies death. This happens because, in the teachings of many religions, people learn that if they have faith, then when they die, they will be compensated, like in the classic Paradise.
