But that lock had bad design features like the fact that it lets you close the lock without the key being in it. I can find very little info on Google about which types of padlocks are most secure. Mostly when I google it I get tons of hits about how to pick a lock, which is apparently very easy, hence my concern.

The Roots of Loneliness

Catteries use cages to lock up their cats at night so probably the RSPCA isn't going to knock down your door because of it, if you have provided all the necessities such as food water and litter. Ethically though I have to say, I wouldn't recommend it because the poor cat will get bored and lonely.
