is a rich historical examination of US foreign policy toward Latin America from the early 1800s to 1996... The volume stands apart from other works in the field in that the unifying theme throughout is the well-documented argument that US policy makers consistently have treated their southern neighbors as inferiors.

Summary. S receiver functions from 67 broad-band seismic stations in the western United States clearly reveal the existence of a mantle discontinuity with velocity reduction downward, which we interpret as the lithosphere-asthenosphere boundary (LAB). The average depth of the LAB is 70 km. The boundary is relatively sharp with an overall sharpness of less than 20 km.
