Chicago: A Novel. The author of the highly acclaimed The Yacoubian Building returns with a story of love, sex, friendship, hatred, and ambition set in Chicago, with a cast of American and Arab characters achingly human in their desires and needs. Egyptian and American lives collide on a college campus in post-9/11 Chicago,...

It is a 'crime novel' in the sense that its subject is criminality but it is not a 'noir', 'hard-boiled' novel. It is what you would expect if you took a brilliant dramatist and set him the task of capturing the feel of Capone-era Chicago. It is the sort of book that would dazzle art-novel readers who seldom read genre fiction.

How to create footnotes and endnotes for Chicago Style. When used again, instead of writing out the complete citation for a second time in the footnote, only include: the author's last name, the title or a phrase for the title (if it's more than four words), and the page number(s) that were used. This will reduce the bulk of citation information in the paper.

'Chicago: A Novel' Book Review | National Review

Chicago is unique in my experience. It is a sui generis creation that defies the conventional rules of fiction. It is not a novel, at least not as I understand the form – it has no central conflict that is resolved (or left unresolved), no central character (the anonymous narrator largely remains aloof from the action), no overall plotline, and appears to lack a beginning, middle, and end.
