Algonquin Longhouse
The children would help also and the whole house would have been a hive of activity. The longhouses would have been busy, noisy places. With large numbers of people living under one roof, and animals living there too, finding peace and quiet would have been impossible. There would have been almost no privacy in the longhouse either.

The Vikings wanted new land because the places where they came from in Scandinavia - Norway, Sweden and Denmark - weren't very easy to live in. It was hard to grow crops, which meant there wasn't a lot of food as the population got bigger. Britain and Europe had plenty of good farmland, so the Vikings tried to claim some of that land for themselves.
