There are three new commands used in multiple-line patterns: "N," "D," and "P." I will explain their relation to the matching "n," "d," and "p" single-line commands. The "n" command will print out the current pattern space (unless the "-n" flag is used), empty the current pattern space, and read in the next line of input.

The approved answer by Thilo is incorrect as it uses Euler's totient function instead of Carmichael's totient function to find d. While the original method of RSA key generation uses Euler's function, d is typically derived using Carmichael's function instead for reasons I won't get into. The math needed to find the private exponent d given p q and e without any fancy notation would be as follows:

Bourne proved time and time again that he was willing to throw caution to the wind, especially when opponents least expected it. When you look like a happy-go-lucky sprout in a land of snarling giants, extreme measures need to be taken. Leave it to the hardcore faithful, then, to be the first to embrace Bourne in his WWE debut.
