Death A Life George Pendle

Death: A Life by George Pendle is a satirical novel pretending to be a memoir written by Death chronicling his life and work. Really though, it's a parody of religion and creationism. Initially, I picked up Death: A Life because the concept of a memoir written by Death struck me as hilarious, but I wasn't expecting it to be as well written and entertaining as it was.

George Pendle is a British author and journalist. He has written articles for The Times, Financial Times, and The Los Angeles Times to name a few. He has also written four novels, and two seem to be what are known as fake autobiographies, Death a Life and The Remarkable Millard Fillmore. I do not know much else about him other than this is the first book of his that I have read.

George Pendle - Wikipedia

George Pendle: Death: A Life. When it comes to anthropomorphizing the stages of human existence, everybody loves Death. No one has much time for colicky Birth or the awkward advances of a pock-faced Puberty, but in art, skeletons and scythes are always in. Part of it's the irony, part of it's the macabre, but perhaps the largest appeal...
