4 'The Headmaster Ritual' by The Smiths. An unforgettably evocative lyric to open 'The Headmaster Ritual', and in turn 1985's 'Meat is Murder', this is the sharpest snapshot of Morrissey's miserable experience with Thatcher's education system. The "cemented minds" perfectly capture everything regressive and ugly about murky urban schools.

The man is a poet and ranks right alongside, lennon and dylan in lyric writing ability. Obviously the idiots who voted have never heard Born to run, Nebraska or The River... Pity them I can honestly say, I truly believe Bruce Springsteen to be a lyricist leagues ahead of both Bob Dylan and John Lennon.

Morrissey is/was one such book lover, according to his song lyrics. Is his own novel great? Compared to what? Fiction is not exactly the burning spearpoint of our cultural output (is there one? Is there any?) List of the lost is worth the read mainly because its wordplay is so fun, so complex, entertaining in its convoluted retro bombast.

You could write almost any shit and it could be a Cave lyric. I am blood that drips through fingers and never changes colour. See. I wrote that in no time at all. It must have been hard for alternative artists in the '80s to live through Morrissey's deification. No wonder some are a little bitter. Morrissey did steal all their thunder.
