Today's post is one of the rare ones that discusses a book I've read. I've previously written about Dani Shapiro's Devotion and Katie Rosman's If You Knew Suzy. Today I share some thoughts I have after reading Darin Strauss's memoir Half a Life. The book won The National Book Critics' Circle Award. If you'd like to hear some excerpts, you can listen to an NPR podcast here.

Half my life ago, I killed a girl. So begins Darin Strauss' Half a Life, the true story of how one outing in his father's Oldsmobile resulted in the death of a classmate and the beginning of a different, darker life for the author.

Half a Life (memoir) - Wikipedia

Half a Life is an unusually honest, thoughtful and unsettling memoir, which readers and critics are destined to call 'brave'—for it is brave. But the book is more than simply brave, it is a searingly self-disciplined work of literature, and of self-examination. Darin Strauss does not permit himself even one sentence, even one moment, of lazy thinking, or mitigating excuses.

Half a Life by Darin Strauss | Lisa Bonchek Adams

Redress and atonement mar a boy's adolescence after the accidental death of a classmate. In 1988, Strauss (Writing/New York Univ.; More Than It Hurts You, 2008, etc.), one month shy of his high-school graduation, struck Celine Zilke while out on a joyride with friends in his hometown of Glen Head, Long Island. Zilke, a popular 16-year-old girl who was the "lively athletic type," remained ...

Half a Life Summary | SuperSummary

Strauss has a number of scenes (him chatting up girls at the accident site; going to the movies later) that paint him in an unfavorable color. Do you think this makes him less likeable, or more so. How effective is he in drawing your sympathy. Do you think he wants to? It took Strauss half a life to write this book.
