Gödel's ontological proof is a formal argument by the mathematician Kurt Gödel (1906–1978) for the existence of God. The argument is in a line of development that goes back to Anselm of Canterbury (1033–1109). St. Anselm's ontological argument, in its most succinct form, is as follows: "God, by definition, is that for which no greater can be conceived.

Ontological Argument

Moreover, God teaches men whatever they know of this truth (Ps. 94:10-11). But the teaching of Genesis carefully distinguishes man the creature from God the Creator. This implies that God is the originator of mathematical truth, while man is only a recipient. God knows all mathematical truth and never errs, while man knows in part and does err.

If logic is not a really existing object like God is, then the question of 'which came first' is moot—logic wouldn't 'exist' in the real metaphysical sense that God does. Rather, 'logic' would just be a description of how God thinks—God is logical. Note that this is not a question about whether logical statements are true (that's an ...

Logic is a framework for understanding created beings and their doings, but God is not created. He is not finite. And He is not bound by logic. What we see as the ultimate basis of understanding is not ultimate at all. It is a created thing too. To say God is not logical isn't to say he is illogical. It is to say that God is beyond logic. He ...
