If your child gets a C+, for example, try to pitch a fit one semester, grounding him for two weeks, and the next semester let him know that you understand that he tried his best. This will nurture your child's fear of the unknown, and gradually he will start hiding things from you and declining to see your counsel, both of which will point him in ever

It is of course ironical, but the authors nicely keep up the pretense that your objective would actually be to traumatize your children to the maximum possible.
Some of the parent types are the spoiler, the best-friend-forever, the ambitious parent, the continuously disappointed parent and so on.
