When Juergen Teller Photographed 1990s Go-Sees | AnOther

The Go-Sees is a seminal work from Teller's early career. Created in the photographer's West London studio, the project was completed in 1999 and explores the concept of the open-ended encounter between the photographer and model, without the prospect of a definite commission. Its concept, similarly to other works by Teller, obliquely questions the fashion industry as a whole.
