regulating the switch from mitotic primordial germ cells to meiotic germ cells are poorly understood. Here, we implicate intercellular bridges (ICBs) in this state transition. We used three-dimensional in toto imaging to map meiotic initiation in the mouse fetal ovary and revealed a radial geometry ...

Malaria is a parasitic infection spread by mosquitoes that causes hundreds of millions of cases each year. People are most likely to die from malaria the first time they are infected - usually when they are young children. Among those who survive, however, few will develop severe symptoms again, even though they are often reinfected with as many (or even more) parasites.
