You will be using (and writing!) code in Matlab for the analysis of EEG data. Prior experience with Matlab programming is obligatory. There will be no time to learn Matlab from scratch during this course, so make sure you have followed at least one introductory course if you are not yet proficient with Matlab.

EEG / MRI Matlab Toolbox

Here is a simple bit of MATLAB code to do these three steps and read in one second's worth of data. You can find an m-file of this code including comments here ( muse\_test.m ). When you run the code above, when it

MATLAB made it easy for us to develop a sophisticated scientific application with an extensive graphical interface. Second, MATLAB is widely used in the scientific community. As a result, researchers can interact directly with their data using Brainstorm, contribute new plug-ins, and exchange ideas and code prototypes with other Brainstorm users.

When EEG data is recorded by NIC from Enobio or StarStim instruments, several files are created. These include an .info file and an .easy file. "Easy" format data is, well, easy to load into a program such as Matlab. See Manuals & Downloads / Repository for more sophisticated sample code to do data analysis.

The EEG data  $X$  is filtered with these  $p$  spatial filters. Then the variance of the resulting four time series is calculated for a time window  $T$ . Figure 8 displays the time series after filtering the EEG data with the two most important (1, 27) and the two second most important (2, 26) common spatial patterns, according to equation (1).
