A panini press may or may not come with a temperature control. If you are going to use a panini press to also prepare other foods such as pizzas or burgers then you should go with a one that has temperature settings rather than the pre-set panini press. Drip Tray . A drip tray is important since it collects all of the juices that drip from the press into a tray which can be easily disposed of, rather than messing up the kitchen countertop.

panini press will depend on the price and brand, but it ' s often around 450 (232). Not all panini presses have an adjustable temperature, so if you ' re concerned about having variety in your grilling temperature, it ' s best to look out for one with a dial or different temperature settings.

Amazon.com: panini press

A panini press is a versatile kitchen accessory that can make much more than just delicious sandwiches. You can create crinkled pancakes and French toast that can hold the syrup and butter more easily in its grooves. Ice cream lovers will adore creating their own waffle cones in their very own panini press as well.

And if you've never owned one before, a panini press is a type of contact grill used to apply pressure to both sides of a panini (an Italian-style sandwich) as it's toasted. The ribbed top and bottom plates of the panini press stay parallel as you lower the top plate onto the food, toasting your food evenly and giving it those fabulous "grill" marks that seemingly make food taste even better.
