[Book Review: Public Markets and Civic Culture in ...

Historically our towns and cities grew up around markets, which served as our original civic centers. While many of the old buildings have been dismantled, inexpensive and lightweight alternatives have been multiplying. By 1946, there were just 499 markets left in the US; that number rose to 2,863 by 2000, and then shot up to 8,144 by 2013.
