Redwall | Mechanically Inclined

Brian Jacques' Redwall series is set in an imaginary world inhabited by anthropomorphic animals, most of which are native to the British Isles. Published in 1986, Redwall was the first book written in the series (but is not the first chronologically) and tells the story of Matthias, a young mouse living among the order of healers at the abbey.

The core mechanics of Root RPG use the Powered by the Apocalypse system, which has been used in countless story-driven games over the past few years. This reliable set of rules is reasonably simple and straightforward, with virtually every dice roll the players make - the GM doesn't need to touch the dice at all - being linked to maybe a dozen or so neatly-defined 'moves' they have ...

Once again, I'm shamelessly stealing drawing inspiration from Little Mephling for some RPG outlet. We've been starting on the Redwall series by Brian Jacques, one of my favorite set of books from when I was little. It's an enchanting story, an action-packed adventure, and a richly-built world with lots of different cultures and histories.

Book Review: Redwall - Brian Jacques | Rose Red Prince

A word on Brian Jacques - A thought or two about Redwall. I'm briefly breaking my set schedule of writing once a week this month to address something very important to me: the recent passing of my favorite author, Brian Jacques (pronounced Jakes). Several years ago (I think it was 1999), I went to a book signing in Bailey's Crossroads.
