Reparations for slavery is a proposal that some type of compensation should be provided to the descendants of slaves from the Atlantic slave trade. This idea has been recurring in the politics of the United States, from the 1865 Special Field Orders No. 15 to the 2020 Democratic Party presidential primaries. This compensation has been proposed in a variety of forms, from individual monetary payments to land-based compensation related to independence. The idea remains highly controversial and no

Another axiomatic strength of this work is that it is an interdisciplinary inquiry which unifies knowledge. The editors, Jon Miller and Rahul Kumar state that the unification of disciplines was pertinent in view of the complex issues which must be considered in any credible work on the topic.

Reparations Interdisciplinary Inquiries
In Reparations: Interdisciplinary Inquiries, Glenn Loury argues that finding a common narrative for the nation should be an important component of reparations for slavery and the Jim Crow laws in the United States. He suggests that part of the effort to overcome racial inequalities is developing a nation's sense of shared purpose and common fate.

Introduction: A Gender and Reparations Taxonomy - The ...
Abstract. Considered costly, divisive, and backward-looking, reparations for slavery and Jim Crow appear to have no place in the politics of the 'postracial epoch.' This essay proposes that the dismissal of reparations concedes too much. First, I contend that the conjunction of postracial discourse, on the one hand, and deepening racial inequalities...
