A collection of two interviews in which Ranciere speaks about what he sees as the inherent connection between art, aesthetics, and the political. The main idea seemed to be that, especially since the early 19th-century, the aesthetic has helped to break up the "distribution of the sensible," which Ranciere defines as that which subjects can see and hear.

Aesthetics and Politics by Theodor W. Adorno

This book suggests that modern cultural and critical institutions have persistently associated questions of aesthetics and politics with literature, theory, technics, and Romanticism. Its first section examines aesthetic nationalism and the figure of the body, focusing on writings by Benedict Anderson, J. G. Fichte, and Matthew Arnold, and arguing that uneasy acts of aestheticization (of media ...
