The Bald Soprano is an absurdist play by Romanian-French playwright Eugène Ionesco, first performed in French in 1950. The play centres on the Smiths, a couple from London, and another couple, the Martins, who come over for a visit. The two families chatter in meaningless banter, tell stories and relate nonsensical truisms and poems.

The Bald Soprano Summary.
This is frustrating for the Smiths. The Smiths argue over the fate of the Bobby Watsons, namely who will take care of the two young Bobby Watsons now that father Bobby Watson is gone, when their maid, Mary, enters. Mary announces that the Martins, another English couple, have arrived. The Smiths go to their bedroom to change their clothes.

Bald Soprano The Characters
The Bald Soprano was, in large part, inspired by Ionesco's failed attempt at learning English using the Assimil method. The Assimil method, the most popular language learning tool in France at the time, teaches a new language by having the student copy down prescribed sentences with a translation alongside.

SparkNotes: The Bald Soprano
"The Bald Soprano" is the only line that interrupts the flow of jibberish and elicits a reaction. As an exception to these sorts of experimental works, I enjoyed the flow of this play. The two couples, the maid, and the fire chief all revolved around each other and in the end change roles.
