In both a critical and popular sense, it is England that has been equated with Britain, and it is the English film industry, with its economic base in London, that has dominated British cinema. A further complication is the United Kingdom's ties to the European Union, which has led to an increase in co-productions where aspects of national identity tend to become subsumed.

Arts: The British Free Cinema movement | Film | The Guardian
While 1960s Britain is most often remembered for its glamour, the cultural revolution and increasing liberalisation, it wasn't like that for everyone. In the north of England in particular, life remained hard and the lights of London must have seemed very distant. Cinema played its role in shedding light on this disparity.

The guide to British Cinema and Movie History Background ...
Celebrating British cinema of the 1950s To counterbalance the rather tepid humanism of our cinema, it might also be said that it is snobbish, anti-intelligent, emotionally inhibited, willfully blind to the conditions and problems of the present, dedicated to an out of date, exhausted national idea. (Lindsay Anderson)
