The crystals in snowflakes are symmetrical because water molecules arrange themselves into a predetermined order, or crystallization. And because each "arm" of the snowflake is formed under the same atmospheric conditions, the arms on each individual snowflake look identical despite being unique from all others.

Lesson Plan Inspiration: The Life Cycle of a Snowflake

A snowflake begins when a tiny dust or pollen particle comes into contact with water vapor high in Earth's atmosphere. The water vapor coats the tiny particle and freezes into a tiny crystal of ice. This tiny crystal will be the "seed" from which a snowflake will grow. The molecules of water that ...
