The Sun Rising - Poem by John Donne.
She's all states, and all princes I, Nothing else is. Princes do but play us; compar'd to this, All honour's mimic, all wealth alchemy. Thou, sun, art half as happy'as we, In that the world's contracted thus;
Thine age asks ease, and since thy duties be To warm the world, that's done in warming us.

The Sun Rising (poem) - Wikipedia

The Sun Rising Summary Like all of us in the morning, John Donne starts out angry at the sun. He feels way too good to be bothered by its shine and tells it to get lost and go bother other, lesser people. He tells the sun that love isn't some slave to the sun's movements or the changing of the seasons, so shove off, thank you very much.

The Sun Rising by John Donne: Summary
Despite the fact that societies have progressed and changed a great deal since poems such as The Sun Rising were written by John Donne, the emotions and ideas that fuel such works are strong enough and relatable enough that those poems, despite their context existing in a time long past, are very much a topic of interest even today. Written at some point during the life of Donne (it isn't clear when, though he lived from 1572 to 1631) it remains an interesting piece of literature today.

In "The Sun Rising," Donne speaks to the sun using apostrophe, a rhetorical device in which he addresses an inanimate object (the sun) as if it were a person able to respond. Using apostrophe, write your own poem addressing an imaginary or absent object as if it were present and able to reply.

SparkNotes: Donne's Poetry: "The Sun Rising"

'The Sun Rising' (sometimes referred to with the original spelling, as 'The Sunne Rising') is one of John Donne's most popular poems. In this poem, Donne apostrophises (i.e. addresses in a rhetorical fashion) the sun, as it peeps through the curtains in the morning, disturbing him and his lover as they lounge around in bed.

Analysis of The Sun Rising by John Donne
Burt has construed the construction of Donne's poem "the sun raising" in a manner fit for commendation. Donne, writing at the end of the elizabethan period, does something very new. He uses strange comparisons for different feelings and emotions. He thinks that the comparisons and metaphors used by his predessors had been repeated over and over again and had lost their freshness and value. So he uses a "compass" for describing his love instead of a "rose". Thus he has been called as a metaphysical poet.
