A young English wife becomes the mistress of a tea plantation in Ceylon and is quickly confronted with upheavals—racial, social, and domestic—in Jefferies' U.S. debut. Gwen, daughter of a landed Gloucestershire family, marries widower Laurence Hooper, descended from Ceylon's original English settlers.

The Tea Planter's Wife by Dinah Jefferies | Waterstones

When I received The Tea Planter's Wife in the mail, I was struck at how beautiful the cover of the book is. The woman in the foreground and her beautiful golden dress melt into the luscious landscape behind her and are enhanced by the palm tree leaves peeking out from the edges.
