Saul Bellow is the most rewarding of living American novelists. Even when he is only clever, he has a kind of spirited intellectual vanity that enables him to take on all the facts and theories about the pathetic and comically exposed condition of civilized man—not woman, however—and distribute them like high-class corn so that the [...]

ANALYSIS . The Victim (1947) Saul Bellow (1915-2005) "What Mr. Bellow attempts is to compress into an arena the size of two human souls the agony of mind which has ravaged millions of Jews in our century. The Victim rates as a subtle and thoughtful contribution to the literature of 20th century anti-Semitism." Richard Match . New York Herald Tribune
