Unshed Tears. When I was 16, I had a parasite in my eye that caused unbearable pain and made me partially blind. I was forced to bottle up all of my feelings because if I ever began to cry, my eye would burn and cause me even more pain. Photography was a way for me to escape my world and express my feelings without ever actually feeling them.

Unshed Tears. I can't cry. I yell. I scream. It's the only thing that keeps me sane. Bottled-up emotions are the worst thing for someone who's mourning the loss of a loved one. Since I can't cry, there's no other way for me to let it out. The scientific explanation for it all evades me, but, simply put, the tears dry before they can spill over.
