A values-based estate plan tries to send a message to future generations about what their parents, grandparents and great-grandparents thought were important. There are a couple of principles that should be kept in mind when designing a values-based estate plan: First, an estate plan is a blank slate. The features that one places in the plan are limited only by one’s imagination. Second, it is important not to get too carried away. An estate plan should be kept simple.
