A third and less common concept is the double standard of aging, which assumes that men are generally less penalized for aging than women. This assumption is supported by a greater frequency of partnerships of older men with younger women and much more variability in men's remarriage than in women's (Berardo, Appel, and Berardo 1993).

How Does the Age Gap Between Partners Affect Their Survival?

One possible reason for this disparity is that women are less interested than men in remarrying. Among previously married women, 54% of a 2014 Pew Research Center survey that they did not want to marry again, compared with 30% of men. 5 One-in-six newlyweds (17%) were married to someone of a different race or ethnicity in 2015.
