Spades is traditionally a game for four players, played in partnership (with the partners sitting opposite each other). The players take turns playing out one card from their hands clockwise around the table. You must play a card in whichever suit is played first (or led) if you can, which is called following suit. The [...]

Win At Spades Basic And
The person who plays the highest card in the led suit or the highest spade collects up the four cards played and wins the trick. At every trick, the player who won the previous trick can lead anything she likes — with the exception of spades. You can't lead spades at any point in the game until the suit is broken.

Grasping the Basics of Spades - dummies
If more than one trump is played in a trick, the highest trump wins. If spades are not the led suit, a spade can be played only if the player has no cards in the led suit. A spade cannot be led until a spade has "trumped" an earlier trick of a different suit or when only spades are left in the hand. The winner of a trick leads to the next trick.

How to Play Spades: Complete Card Game Rules
When spades are played in a trick (either lead or off suit) the highest spade will win. This means that a lowly deuce of spades will take out someone's non-spade Ace. Many times, your hand will have no honors (therefore a 0 by straight counting) but will have enough trump to warrant a bid.
